Fetal Baby with Umbilical Cord and Placenta, Universal

This fetal manikin is a replica of a full-term fetus (approximately 38 weeks of gestation), with a weight of about 2.6kg. It features a proportionate head, trunk and limbs, realistically depicting the external anatomy.

1. Fetal Manikin: A replica of a full-term fetus (approximately 40 weeks of gestation), weighing about 2.6 kilograms. This model has a proportionate head, trunk and limbs with realistic external anatomical structures; its head is equipped with palpable anterior/posterior fontanelles sagittal suture, ribs and spine.
2. Detachable Placenta: It has accurate anatomical structures, including a clear lobulated maternal surface and a membranous fetal surface, with dimensions and thickness conforming to the standards of 40 weeks of gestation. It includes two placentas (one intact and one ruptured) to simulate retained tissues, showing the amnion and chorion; it is equipped with a safe and quick-detachable connector, which facilitates connecting the umbilical cord to the fetal surface.
3. Detachable Umbilical Cord: This is a key structure that plays an important role in both the labor process and the post-birth stage. It is 50 centimeters long and 1 centimeter in diameter, with a realistic appearance and a clearly distinguishable insertion site. It has a realistic texture and correct structure (two arteries and one vein are visible); palpable umbilical artery pulsation can be felt by manually squeezing the bulb. It is also equipped with an umbilical cord stump for simulating umbilical venous catheterization operations, and is suitable for practicing clinical skills such as clamping, positioning and cutting.
4. Airway: It displays the accurate anatomical structures of the baby's mouth and pharynx, facilitating the practice of suction and intubation operations.
5. Articulation: It is equipped with flexible, fully movable joints (neck, shoulders, elbows, hips and knees), supporting realistic simulation of fetal positions (breech, cephalic and transverse presentation).
